Induced Abortion Law Respecting Doctor's Judgement

Min Suk Chung

Department of Anatomy, Ajou University School of Medicine, Suwon, Korea

In the induced abortion law, doctor's scientific judgement should be emphasized.

It is examined how dangerous the abortion is after early pregnancy.

Simultaneously, doctor's moral judgement should be emphasized.

Parents' socioeconomic state is considered.

Induced abortion law respecting doctor's judgement

It is examined whether the suffered disease affects maternal and/or fetal health.

Whether the abortion fits doctor's own conscience must be considered.

Too many diseases to codify in the law.

Doctors can conscientiously refuse to induce abortion.

The doctor's hard judgement is irreplaceable.

► See the article “Social Consensus is Required for Legal Induced Abortion” in volume 34, number 19, e147.